

45 UNIVERSITY MEN GAVE LIVES FOR DEMOCRACY

Forty-five names of those who gave their all in the World War compose the honor roll of the University of Missouri.

Thirty-four of those men were either killed in action or met their death by accident. The other eleven died from influenza and pneumonia in the epidemic that swept this country last fall and winter.

Of the forty-five, seventeen were graduates of the University, twenty-seven former students and the other was an assistant professor at the time he enlisted. In the list are two majors, four captains, fifteen lieutenants and twenty-four enlisted men.

Three of the University men were Columbia boys. Five of them were in the Navy at the time of their deaths, and the remainder were in the Army. It is known that five of the forty-five on the honor roll were killed during the Battle of the Argonne last fall. Five were killed in airplane accidents in this country.

Class of '16 Leads.
The class of 1916 comes first with four of its members among the dead of the University. Last year's class, with three, ranks second. Three former Tiger football players and one baseball letter man are included on the roll.

The honor roll does not include all from the University who gave their lives in the war, in the belief of Charles Roster, managing editor of the Missouri Alumnus and Assistant University publisher, who has collected all the information possible of former students who were in the Army and Navy. It may be many months before the list can be considered complete, and only then when every possible source has been drained of information regarding Missouri's men who fell.

Frank Mathews, who left the University in the spring of 1917 and later enlisted in the aviation, was the first University man to forfeit his life, according to the records. While a flying cadet at Kelly Field in November, 1917, he fell to his death.

Wounded Major Refused to Quit.
Major Murray Davis, LL.B. '09, fell in battle during the fighting in the Argonne Forest. Though twice severely wounded during the fighting he refused to remain behind the lines. Two days later he was killed while leading his battalion.

Lieutenant Jerome Earl Moore, A.B. '09, of Columbia, was killed September 15, 1918, the fourth day of the battle at St. Mihiel. He had enlisted the first day recruits were accepted after war was declared and won his commission at the first officers' training camp.

Captain Leon E. Briggs, who was graduated from the School of Engineering in 1910, was killed during the fighting in the Battle of Argonne, September 28, 1918. He was mortally wounded by machine gun bullets and died several hours later at a field hospital. He had been slightly wounded earlier in the day when a shell exploded demolishing the dugout that he was in at the time.

Died Going Over the Top.
Lieutenant Henry G. Arends, LL.B. '12, died in France, October 26, 1918, of wounds received while leading a portion of his company over the top two days before.

Lieutenant J. J. Donahue, B.S.E.E. '13, was killed in an airplane accident in France, June 26, 1918. He was a member of the 21st Aero Squadron and had been in France since the January before his death.

Clinton Moss, B. J. '14, died of pneumonia at an English seaport last fall. As far as is now known he was the first graduate of the School of Journalism to die while in service.

Leonidas Ellis, B. S. Agr. '14, a former member of the Tiger baseball team, was killed while eating dinner near the front September 12, 1918. He landed in France last June.

Captain Robert M. ("Peaches") Graham, B. S. Agr. '15, was killed while leading his company during a battle on the American front last July. Captain Graham was a member of the 1914 Tiger football team, playing center in the Thanksgiving game that year, when Kansas was defeated.

Charles C. Galbraith, who was graduated from the College of Arts and Science in 1915, died September 29, 1918, of influenza at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. At that time he was in an ensign's school.

Lieutenant Paul E. Corriveau, A.M. '16, died in action while with his company of Marines during the fighting on the American front last fall. He enlisted in the spring of 1917 and went to France early the following year.

Lieutenant Sanford M. Brown, A.B. '16, was killed in action September 25, 1918. According to a letter received by his parents a short time before his death he had been recommended for a captaincy.

Was Ready to Sail.
Clinton Ferry, B.S. in Eng. and A.B. '16, who entered an aviation camp in the fall of 1917, died from a fall in his plane last summer just a few weeks before he would have sailed for France.

Lieutenant James Colwell Harris, B. S. Agr. '16, was killed in action July 15, 1918, near St. Eugene, a small village near Chateau Thierry. This was the battle which General Pershing says stemmed the German advance and was the turning point in the war. Lieutenant Harris was killed while carrying one of his own men to a place of safety after being wounded.

Lieutenant Robert W. Walker, A.B.

'16, B. S. E. E. '17, of Columbia, died August 10, 1918, at San Antonio, Tex., of injuries received in an airplane fall three days before. At the time of his fall it was thought that he had only suffered a broken leg and arm.

David I. Cole, who was graduated from the School of Engineering last June, died in October of influenza while he was attending an officers' training camp at Camp Lee, Va.

George Irion, another member of the graduating class of the School of Engineering last year and impersonator of St. Patrick at the annual celebration of the students in the School of Engineering last March, died in September at Pittsburg, Pa., of influenza. He had finished his course in aviation and had gone to Pittsburg for a few weeks additional training before receiving his commission and overseas orders.

Track Man Died of Influenza.

David Francis Banks, who was graduated last June from the College of Agriculture, a Tiger track man, died February 17, 1919, of pneumonia at the naval hospital at Hampton Roads, Va.

Lieutenant James C. Simpkins, a graduate of the University of Montana and assistant professor in chemistry here in 1916, was killed in action September 18, 1918. He was a radio operator in the air service, and it is thought he died from a fall in a plane. He is, as far as is known, the only former faculty member of the University killed in the war.

Lieutenant Joseph W. Sanborn, a former student, died from injuries received in an airplane accident at Taylor Field, Montgomery, Ala., last fall.

Charles W. Jackson, a student in the University in 1915-1916, died July 5, 1918, of injuries received in an airplane accident a few days before at Selfridge Field, Mount Clemens, Mich. He would have received his commission in two weeks.

"Chuck" Wilson Died of Wounds.
Captain Carlyle R. ("Chuck") Wilson, a former student in the School of Law and captain of the 1913 Tiger football team, died of wounds received in the Battle of Argonne, September 27, 1918. He was made a captain just before he died.

Lieutenant Ewing Boone, a student in the University in 1911-1912, was killed while charging a machine gun emplacement near Paris-Soissons road, July 19, 1918. He was cited for bravery displayed in the action that resulted in his death.

Joseph L. Chamberlain, a former student in the University and member of the 1915 Cadet Band, was killed in action last fall. He was in an artillery band and was killed while delivering a message for his colonel.

Alva Dale Pickett, a student in the University last year, died of pneumonia at Camp Pike, Ark., November 1, 1918. He was attending an officers' training camp at the time.

C. H. McCoun, a former student in the University, was killed in action last summer.

Lieutenant Theodore Bazan, a student in the University from 1914 to 1916, was killed in the third day of fighting during the Battle of Argonne. He was killed by a high explosive shell which severed both arms, and injured him about the body, while leading G Company of the 135th Infantry in an attack.

Shrapnel Killed Major Stepp.

While leading his battalion around a hill during the Battle of Argonne, Major W. Dale Stepp, a former student in the School of Law, was killed outright by bursting shrapnel. He went to France with his battalion when the Missouri National Guards were sworn into federal service.

Lieutenant Lloyd Boutwell of the Medical Detachment of the 314 Engineers, 89th Division died of wounds received in the Grandpre Battle. On a hillside near Grandpre, west of Verdun, he lies buried. He was a student in the School of Medicine here two years.

Lieutenant Herbert S. Richey, a student in the University in 1912-1913, was killed in action on the St. Mihiel salient April 14, 1918. He went to France with the Rainbow Division.

Seven days after the launching of the great American offensive last summer, Lieutenant Roy E. Carr, a former student of the University who was engaged in the fight, was killed in action.

Died Aboard the George Washington.
Ivan H. Epperson, a former student in the University and assistant editor of the Missouri Historical Review, died in October of pneumonia while aboard the United States transport George Washington.

Captain Wendall P. Hay, a former student in the College of Agriculture, met his death during the fighting on the American front last September. He had been made a captain shortly before his death.

Lawrence W. Stewart of Columbia, a former student of the University, died at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, September 28, 1918. He was given a military funeral in Columbia by the members of the S. A. T. C. William T. Franklin, a sophomore in the University last year, died October 10 at an officers' training camp at Camp Pike, Ark.

James Y. Simpson, Jr., a student in the University from 1915 to 1917, was killed in action last June. He sailed with a company of Marines for France November 17, 1917, and saw action from that time until his death.

Harry Hickman, a former student in the University, died of wounds received in action last fall. He left the University to enlist.

Football Man Killed.

Clarence Peoples, a student in the School of Engineering and member of the 1915 football team, was killed in action October 29, 1918. He had written his parents just a few hours before he was killed.

Garnett F. George, formerly a student in the College of Agriculture, died of pneumonia at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, September 13, 1918. He had been in training only a month.

Guy Wentworth Seldon, a student in the College of Agriculture from 1915 to 1917, fell on the firing line in France, September 17, 1918. He was wounded in August and had just returned to the front when killed.

Lawrence T. Ralston of the Marine Corps, formerly a University student, is reported as missing in action early in September and is thought to be dead. He received three flesh wounds last June.

Lieutenant Frank Stauver, a former student in the School of Law, died at Langley Field, Hampton, Va., of pneumonia last October. He had been in the aviation since soon after the war was declared.

Robert Thurman, formerly a University student, fell in battle just a few weeks before the armistice was signed.

GARDEN SEEDS

Last year, war gardens were planted to aid our government in building up a reserve food supply for our soldiers and sailors, and to increase the amount shipped to our allies. These conservation gardens released thousands of trains which were so necessary in the transportation of our soldiers and their supplies.

In spite of all we produced we still have a shortage of a large number of food commodities which will tend to cause all commodities to sell at war prices until we can create a surplus in this country, equal at least, to our normal prewar supply. We must also expect to Europe this year about three times their normal amount, which will cause more effort on our part to overcome this food shortage.

This year we had a large quantity of garden seeds consigned to us and in making a contract, we will be able to furnish you with the highest grade of seeds at a very large discount over present market prices. You cannot afford to not inspect our seeds before buying for this year's garden.
